with all the cash he had and had given succeeded to the business, but they disagreed and ultimately the resort became the property of Richard Cantileld, a man of education with a penchant for works of art, who spent a lot of money on the interior of the building and enough on the gardens and surroundings of the interior of the building and enough on the gardens and surroundings of the property, taking in several acres additional near Circular street, to make his botal outlay more than $50,000. The place was artistic in every detail. Paintings by noted artists and statuary by fannous sculptors adorned the walls or graced the halls of the building, and the less thefe in the United States produced dishes in the model kitchen that tickled the jaded palates of the most critical. That will do. Your dinner has cost to the senses, and the man who came to dine remained to play. Any evening during August there could be seen the biggest men in America walking about. Young man the father led him back to hazarding a wager here and there or hazarding a wager here and there or young man the father led him back to the dinner table and it is said the next playing the game oblivious to the remainder of the world.

Here would be a Senator of the United States known the country wide keeping cases with a jewelled hand and placing his bets with the care and skill of an accustomed hand. He had learned the intricacies of the game long years before in his own native State, where the surroundings were more bizarre than at Canfield's. Seated near him at times was another man in the public eye, another Senator in fact, but a State Senator, who might have gone to any height if he had so chosen.

The people of Saratoga exist and have a walk or a game of golf in the morning, the races in the afternoon, with polo twice a week as a sort of athletic cocktail before dinner at Canfield's or at any of the splendid resorts at the lake or in one of the tree embowered pavilions of the gigantic hotels, with an exquisite band under the galleries, there was nothing wanting in the way of diversion.

Two years ago the ban was placed on gaming and Canfield closed his room of play and would have closed the big dining room but for the importunities of a great many persons who promised to patronize with his own. Near by would occasionally be found a man who had won distinction through playing a part in a drama so many thousand times that he could repeat his lines backward. The Saratoga season, until he died some years ago, found him one of Canfield's devotees, and the same was true of a man who for many years drew with his own.

many persons who promised to patronize the place to such an extent that there would be no deficit at the end of the season.

Canfield smiled one of his rare smiles rubbed his soft white hands together and consented to run the restaurant alone. The result of the previous season must have been far from satisfying, for when 1919 came around he announced that the experiment of running a restaurant without the gaming accompaniment was not a success. The place was for sale, said the master gambler, and with it all that had for so many years charmed visitors from all parts of the country.

Catholicity of taste had been displayed in the formshing of the place and it was supposed that there would be eager competition for the many beautiful things that were housed within the big square houlding, which resembled a museum more than anything else. Naturally there was supposed that the purchase price of $150.000 given by the village of Saratoga for the property included the furnibure and fittings of the place.

Of course the tools of the trade pursued by Cantield and his kind had been removed quietly long before and mayhap the self-same roulsite wheels are purring usidously, sedictively, somewhere else in response to the craving for action in the proposed dealers at the faro tables are scattered—some in Havana, some in scattered—some in Havana, some in should the calliope have been taken over by the circus as its peculiar property after the steamboats were no more?

The circus and the steamboat were contemporaneous and flourished together in days and nights when the calliope was travelling with the steamboat and not with the circus. The steamboat is gone and the circus remains and, strange fate, the calliope, refusing to give up the ghost, has taken to the circus as a protector and friend.

California lion hunters did a pretty good husiness last month, according to a report stand to day by State Comptroller Nye which shows that thirty-eight lions were killed in twenty-two counties, and the State has paid a total of $700 for the scalps the circus as a protector and friend.
